1 For example, in one of the earliest encounters, eleven of La Perouse’s expedition of 1787 were massacred on Tutuila by Samoans visiting from Upolu.

8 Lauaki's political reputation dated back to the 1860s, to his intervention in the Laupepa-Talavou wars. His father, Namulau'u'ulu Atama, had been a contemporary of Malietoa Vai'inupo who accepted Christianity from John Williams. The title 'Lauaki' was presented to Atama by Taufa'ahau, later King George Tupou I of Tonga, on a trip to Samoa in 1828 or 1842. Atama's son Mamoe then inherited it. MS., 'The Mau of Pule', Tofa I'iga Pisa in Davidson Papers, Australian National University. J. W. Davidson and D. Scarr, Pacific Islands Portraits (Canberra, 1970) contains the best account of the early Lauaki.

12 Quoted in E. von Vietsch, Wilhelm Solf: Botschafter zwischen den Zeiten (Tubingen, 1961), p. 65. Solf was born into a comfortable business family in Berlin in 1862. Educated in Eastern Studies at various universities, he joined the German Foreign Office in 1888 and worked for two years in India, revelling in contacts with both the Indians and his British colleagues. In 1891 he began law studies and in 1898 took up an appointment as judge in Dar-es-Salaam, from where he was dispatched to Samoa.

36 Nothing is known of Pualack except that he was the son of a former German Customs Officer and had received an elementary education in San Francisco. According to the Samoanische Zeitung (3 December 1904), the Samoans anticipated raising 12 000 marks for the project. Pualack claimed to be able to offer 16 Pf. a pound (US4c) for copra.
37 In a private letter Solf stated that European merchants not only asked exorbitant prices for trade goods, they also used false weights to measure copra. Solf to von Koenig, 30 April 1904, Solf Papers, 25. Firth, German Recruitment, p. 245 mentions that Samoans were often cheated by 30 to 50 lbs. in every 100 lbs. of copra they traded.

He settled on Ponape about 1878 and remained until 1919, when he was forced to leave by the Japanese; his son, Carlos, still runs a trading store on the island. Dominic claimed to have bought the estate of Johann Kubary, the ethnographer who lived on Ponape, which would have given him land in excess of 1500 ha. Pers. Com. Carlos Etscheit, August 1974.

14 Hahl to Geheimrath, Colonial Dept, 23 June 1899, RKA, 2998. Born in 1868 in Lower Bavaria, Hahl was educated at Freising and the University of Wurzburg, where he studied law. Hahl joined the Colonial Department from the Bavarian Civil Service in 1895 and in January 1896 he arrived in New Guinea as Imperial Magistrate. As Deputy Governor, Hahl had jurisdiction over all administrators in the island sphere but the ultimate authority lay with the Governor of German New Guinea. After 1918 Hahl became a Director of the New Guinea Company and was later prominent in the Nazi Reichskolonialbund, though his Nazism was only nominal. See P. Biskup, 'Dr Albert Hahl—Sketch of a German Colonial Official', Australian Journal of Politics and History 14 (December, 1968), pp. 342-57.

18 Paradoxically, present day memories of Hahl on Ponape mark him as the best-liked administrator during the German period. According to these stories he lived with a Ponapean woman, drank the native beverage, sakau, and on ceremonial occasions wore the Ponapean grass skirt and allowed himself to be rubbed down with coconut oil. 7 In sifting and analysing the Nanpei-Sou Kiti affair, the author's debt to documentary sources can hardly be separated from his debt to individuals in the field, especially P. M. Ehrlich.
8 Venantius to Kilian Muller, 20 June 1910, KM, File 70; Kilian Muller to Hahl, 21 December 1910, RKA, 2589. It is possible that the Capuchins believed Sou Kiti would be the next Nahnmwarki of Kiti and would thus create an opening for the conversion of the whole district. German sources argue that Sou Kiti was definitely in order of succession to the Nahnmwarki-ship, and interpret Nanpei's concern as fear that Sou Kiti would drive him from his estates once he was High Chief. But from subsequent investigations it seems that Sou Kiti's claim to succession was in German times at least, tenuous, for though in the ruling clan, he was not in the ruling sub-clan. True, it was dying out and Sou Kiti was sufficiently eminent and versatile to have seemed to the Germans a possible candidate; his section title from Enipein also stood in a special relationship to the Nahnmwarki line. For the Germans to credit Sou Kiti as important it was not necessary that he be in line to succeed, but that the Germans should believe he was. In typical Ponapean fashion Sou Kiti would not have denied to anyone that he was a possible successor: to keep open one's options to the end is a worthy Ponapean ideal. And in actual fact Sou Kiti did become Nahnmwarki after the death of Nahnmwarki Paul, though this did not occur until the 1920s, during the Japanese occupation. Pers. Comm. S. 8 Emma Forsayth (nee Coe), the daughter of an American father and a Samoan mother, came to Melanesia from Samoa with Thomas Farrell in the 1880s. A shrewd businesswoman, Emma ran the plantation under the name of E. E. Forsayth & Co. and gained the name 'Queen Emma' for the way in which she presided over the commercial and social life of the Europeans in the Gazelle Peninsula. Ralum remained the single most prosperous plantation in the entire Archipelago; it was sold to the Hamburg company, H. R. Wahlen AG, in 1909, reportedly for a sum near £1 million sterling. Emma was also sister-in-law and patron to Richard Parkinson, planter and ethnographer extraordinaire, who made the first detailed study of Tolai life and customs. See R. W. The figure of ten per cent is the same as the percentage of all contacted villagers in German New Guinea estimated to have worked for Europeans by 1913, which is a high overall figure (see p. 155). But considering the continuous and close contact the Tolai had always had with the European economy, their percentage contribution to the work force in 1910 was decidedly low.
