

Acknowledgements

The editors would like to thank the Dean of the Australia and New Zealand School of Government (ANZSOG), Professor Gary Banks AO, for his support and encouragement. The editors are grateful, too, for the generous financial support provided by Professor John Wanna, Sir John Bunting Chair of Public Administration at The Australian National University, and the Curtin Not-for-Profit Initiative, Curtin University.

We also wish to thank the ACT Government's Community Service Directorate for generously meeting the costs of recording the workshop, and cameraman Martin Helmreich for his capable videorecording and post-production work. With regard to the organisation of the workshop, the editors are indebted to Professor Wanna's executive assistant, Claire Dixon; Jamie Kidson and the multimedia team at The Australian National University; and to Jacqui Burkitt, Nicole Mallick and Susie Bate from ANZSOG's marketing team for their invaluable practical assistance.

Thanks go also to Isi Unikowski for pitching in to help at the workshop, as well as to Sam Vincent for shepherding the manuscript through the prepublication process, Jan Borrie for her usual astute and meticulous copyediting and the team at ANU Press.

Of course, neither the workshop nor this book would have been possible without the generous and enthusiastic commitment of the authors and presenters, the discussants and the session chairs. The last deserve special mention as they are not named elsewhere: Professor Andrew Podger, The Australian National University; Dr Alison Procter, ACT Community Services Directorate; and David Casey, Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet.

THE THREE SECTOR SOLUTION

Special thanks go to Natalie Howson, former director-general of the ACT Community Services Directorate, and Simon Rosenberg, CEO of Northside Community Service, for setting the scene in their remarks to the pre-workshop dinner. And, of course, the editors are grateful for the enthusiasm shown by the workshop audience, who remained vitally engaged in the conversation throughout a packed and intellectually demanding day.
