Most of these essays began as presentations in a panel we co-chaired at the State of the Pacific conference at The Australian National University in 2014. The ‘panel on gender’ frequently represents the only time when masculinity and femininity are discussed as though they have a bearing on the ‘real’ issues in the Pacific—security, economic development and politics. But this time was different—the conference began for instance with an inspiring keynote address by Amanda Donigi, a young Papua New Guinean entrepreneur who founded and runs Stella magazine. For organising the conference in such a way that gender and Pacific women were front and centre, we thank Tim Sharp and John Cox.

For their commitment to redrafting chapters, we would like to thank our contributing authors who have been patient and responsive. Comments from reviewers were insightful and in the best sense demanding, and we thank the reviewers for assisting us to improve our original drafts to make this a stronger collection. Thanks also to Carolyn Brewer for her editing work and to the publications team at ANU Press. Ceridwen is also grateful to the School of Global, Urban and Social Studies at RMIT University for the grant that supported the costs of publication.

Finally, for permission to use the photo on the cover we thank the subjects, Rachael Billy Ipai and Charlie Andrew, employees of Pacific Towing (PNG) Ltd, and Neil Papenfus, the General Manager of Pacific Towing, for helping to facilitate this permission.
