About the editor

Daniel McKay

Daniel recently graduated from The Australian National University (ANU) with a Bachelor of Arts (Honours) and Bachelor of Laws (Honours), both with First Class Honours. His research interests are in global and imperial history with a focus on the relations between Australia and the British Empire. In 2015, he was awarded the Mick Williams Prize in History and the ANU Australia-Britain Society Honours Scholarship. His Honours research was recognised with the NSW History Council’s Max Kelly Medal for a work of excellence in Australian history by a beginning historian. Previously, he has held Summer Research Scholarships at the School of History at ANU and at the University of Queensland. In 2014, he won the History category of the international Undergraduate Awards and attended the Global Summit in Dublin, Ireland. An aspiring historian, he hopes for a career in the service of curiosity and learning.
