

Acknowledgments

Does History Matter? is the result of a lengthy process that began with an invitation, issued by Paul 't Hart and Tim Rowse, to run a workshop on the role of the past in immigration policy making under the umbrella of the Governing by Looking Back conference at The Australian National University in December 2007. We would like to thank Paul and Tim for prompting our interest in the issues canvassed in this volume.

The Politics and International Relations Program at La Trobe University and the Institute for Social Research (ISR) at Swinburne University of Technology have provided a congenial environment for our work. The Australian Research Council has funded part of this project through a Discovery Grant administered by Swinburne University.

We would like to thank the individual contributors for patiently responding to our queries and suggestions and for bearing with us while we were negotiating the publication of their papers. We are grateful to John Butcher for timely advice and for seeing the project through to its completion and to the volume's five anonymous reviewers for their comments. A big thank you goes to David Hudson at the ISR, to the ANZSOG series editorial team and to staff at ANU E Press for assisting us in the final stages of the publication process.