For this book, I undertook the original research that involved recording, transcribing, and translating the songs, as well as writing the introduction. Don Niles has contributed the other sections and edited the entire volume to bring it to its present form.

I would like to thank all of the Foi men and women, past and present, of Hegeso and Barutage villages whose compositions appear in this volume. I also thank Don Niles and the Institute of Papua New Guinea Studies for allowing me to bequeath these poetic songs to the Foi people, who have so graciously allowed me to live with and question them since 1979.

I also appreciate the efforts of Andrew McWilliam in seeing this submission through the ANU editorial committee for Anthropology in Pacific and Asian Studies, and to David Gardiner and Emily Tinker for assistance at ANU Press. Special thanks go to Nick Thieberger and others at the Pacific and Regional Archive for Digital Sources in Endangered Cultures (PARADISEC) for undertaking the digitisation of my audio recordings, thereby enabling examples to accompany this book.
