Fiducial Governance

An Australian republic for the new millennium
Fiducial Governance
An Australian republic for the new millennium

John Power
Professor John Wanna is the Sir John Bunting Chair of Public Administration at the Research School of Social Sciences at The Australian National University and is the director of research for the Australian and New Zealand School of Government (ANZSOG). He is also a joint appointment with the Department of Politics and Public Policy at Griffith University and a principal researcher with two research centres: the Governance and Public Policy Research Centre and the nationally-funded Key Centre in Ethics, Law, Justice and Governance at Griffith University.
Contents

Foreword ........................................ ix
About the author ................................ xi
Acknowledgments .............................. xiii
Preface ........................................... xv
Introduction ..................................... 1
1. A framework for constitutional reform ............................ 13
2. The current Australian regime ............................. 31
3. Reconfiguring head-of-state offices in Australia .................. 47
4. Conclusion: republican measures for a republican future .... 57
Appendix .......................................... 65
References ....................................... 73
Index ............................................... 83