DEATH PRACTICES IN THE NORTH WEST OF AUSTRALIA

Jack Bohemia and William McGregor

Introduction

All human societies have rites and taboos surrounding death. In mainstream Australian society, for instance, the dead are disposed of in rites of the funeral, either by burial or cremation. And there is a taboo - which usually lasts for some weeks or months - on mentioning the words 'dead', 'death', 'die' (and many others such as 'kick the bucket', 'croak') to, or in the presence of close relatives of the dead; this taboo is particularly strong in reference to the dead person, who 'passes away'.

In traditional times, Australian Aboriginal societies had their own unique, highly developed and elaborate death rites and taboos. Quite a lot is known about them, as they have enjoyed a prominent place in anthropological studies, which usually include a full chapter on the rites of death. Accounts such as these are 'normally' pieced together from information gleaned from a variety of quite disparate sources, including, primarily, other anthropological works, participant observation, and interviews with Aboriginal people. In doing this, the anthropologist acts as a bricoleur, weaving together his or her coherent and (hopefully) internally consistent account from the materials available to him/her.

One may well wonder how Aborigines themselves understand, conceptualise, and speak about their own rites and taboos of death. Do they see the same events as most significant, and most worthy of being spoken about? Do they understand, and represent particular events associated with death in the same, or similar ways to the ways attributed to them by anthropologists? Do they invest the same significance in these events? Having asked these questions, we might proceed to ask, where there are differences in opinion, interpretation, or 'facts', which is the more reliable, or which is the truth, or a better representation of the truth? These issues of verisimilitude are not of particular interest to us in the present

Jack Bohemia was born on Old Bohemia station around the turn of the century. He worked for many years as a stockman on that station and many others in the region, and as a police tracker. He is best known for his involvement in the apprehension of Banjo, the so called Aboriginal 'outlaw' who 'allegedly' killed two white men on Billiluna station in 1922. In 1972 Bohemia was awarded the British Empire Medal Western Australian for thirty-two years of service to the police and community.

William McGregor is a lecturer in linguistics at Bond University. He has made a depth study of Gooniyandi (published in 1990), and undertaken briefer studies of four other Kimberley languages since 1982. He is currently working with Jack Bohemia on the production of a volume of texts relating to Bohemia's experiences as a police tracker.

1 This paper is the product of a series of field-interview type dialogues between Jack Bohemia and Bill McGregor; the monologic parts (all spoken almost entirely by the former) were transcribed into notebooks, and translated into English by the latter, with the assistance of the former. McGregor bears the responsibility for everything but what Bohemia actually said in the original texts. The Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies is thanked for financing McGregor's field trips, on which this paper is based.

context, and I certainly do not wish to claim that members of a culture are always right in their interpretation of their rites, or even that their interpretations are necessarily preferable to, or better than the interpretations of a non-member. I will, however, be suggesting that speakers' accounts, particularly in the form of biographical narratives, can provide important insights, which cannot be ignored by the anthropologist.

In fact, the literature contains very few accounts of the rites of death, and associated taboos, as told by Aborigines themselves. Accordingly, the main purpose of this paper is to begin filling this gap in the literature, and to publish some accounts of traditional death practices of Aborigines in the southern-central Kimberley region of Western Australia, as told by Jack Bohemia, a member of the Gooniyandi 'tribe' (see map), in his mother tongue, Gooniyandi.

Mode of transcription

Each text is represented in two written versions. The first is a transcription of the original spoken Gooniyandi text; this appears on the left-hand, even numbered pages. The Gooniyandi text is divided into lines (each of which represent, roughly, a sentence); these consist of one or more pause units (or stretches of speech between pauses), which are delimited by commas. Pause units usually coincide with tone units, or stretches of speech uttered on a single intonation contour; those few pauses which occur within tone units are indicated by semi-colons.

The transcripts also indicate vowel lengthening, by a colon following the vowel. In Gooniyandi, word final vowels are lengthened either to indicate intensity or duration, or to indicate conjunction, 'and'. Another way in which word-final vowels may be modified is by a following period of voiceless articulation; this has been represented by the letter h. Such final syllables usually have greater than normal stress, and it seems that the effect is to add emphasis to the word.

For spelling Gooniyandi words I have adopted a phonemic orthography which is similar to the (non-phonemic) orthography which speakers of the language have chosen to use. This system is fully described by McGregor. The majority of the letters and digraphs have the expected values. It should be noted, however, that oo symbolises the high back vowel normally written u in Australian languages, and dd represents the apical tap normally written rr (written with a single d in the Chestnut-Hudson-Street system).

The texts contain a number of words which are clearly not traditional Gooniyandi words. These are mainly borrowings from English, and most have been assimilated into Gooniyandi phonetics. They have been spelt according to the Gooniyandi system. In a few instances a word of English derivation was pronounced in a more English way (that is, in a 3 Exceptions include Pompy Siddon's 'When a relative died', in Hudson, Richards, Siddon, Skipper et al 1978:44-45, and Roughsey 1984:196-201.

4 Ideally, I believe, two other representations of the texts should be included: one containing interlinear morpheme-by-morpheme translations of the type traditionally provided by linguists, and a second providing a free translation of each text as a whole. However, considerations of space preclude the inclusion of these versions. In their place, I have opted for a final section with a summary and commentary on the texts, which highlights the principal matters raised.
5 For a detailed description of the system of transcription, see McGregor 1986b; a similar system is employed by Muecke, Rumsey and Wirrunmarra 1985.
6 Street and Chestnut 1983.
7 1986a.
Fig. 1. Map of Kimberley region. way that more closely approximates English phonetics); such words have been spelt either as in standard English (where it is clear that there has been a shift towards that language), or in a phonemically accurate way, using an extended Gooniyandi orthography (where e.g. a non-Gooniyandi sound such as [s] occurs).

Opposite each Gooniyandi line, on the right-hand page, is a 'loose translation' into English - that is, a translation which attempts to preserve the flavour of the original as a spoken utterance. The same conventions are employed throughout this translation as in the original, except that no attempt has been made to represent the lengthening of vowels.

The texts

The following six texts, and one excerpt from a longer text, were narrated by Jack Bohemia to William McGregor in 1982, during the course of the latter's second field trip to Fitzroy Crossing, investigating the Gooniyandi language. They represent but a small fraction of the corpus of Gooniyandi texts collected by McGregor which mention death and associated rituals or taboos. The six full texts have been chosen because they are all quite short and to the point, and restrict themselves to the themes of death rituals (texts 1 to 5) and taboos (text 6). Although there is a good deal of repetition between the first five narratives (reflecting the commonality amongst performances of the rites) there are also a number of interesting differences of detail, which accounts for the inclusion of them all.

The excerpt (text 7) is included also, because it gives descriptive detail which in places surpasses the detail given in the six full texts. The full story is far too long to include here, and only a small part is relevant to the theme of this paper. In fact, this text is a retelling of a story which had been told a few days previously; in the meantime, I had asked a number of questions of detail about death rites, and this prompted Bohemia to recount a fuller version of the story.

Plate 1: Jack Bohemia in Police uniform, at Fitzroy Crossing Races, 1982, with daughter Daisy.
Text 1: An inquest

yoowooloo ngamoongamoonhingi, boolgawoolga ngamoongamoonhingi, nyag; maa, gardinhooydingga; yiganji gardinhooydingga, yoowooy gardinhooydingga, nyagjawoo, nyagbiddiniyi, yoowoooloo, lanygiya (1) bagiwayi::, milawiddayi:: gijbindi bagiwindi thithi, bidi; yiganjinyali bagiwindi, maroowa wardbidiyih, barnbidiy, yilba warangbiddi::; ligoowiddaniwiddangi (5) goowaa bijngami, niyaji yoowoooloo nangbani thangarni, goowooy bijngarniwiwiddungi wambah; bidingga yoodbidi; (coughs), yaabjangga; yoo; gamanaya thadibiddaddi gaaddi wilajgawooy thadibiddungi yinggingaddi ngaaddi thadibiddanhi:: wilajga (10) wambaboolthoogjawindi, wambanyali ligawidda, yanthhooddgjawani, migaya; girili; milawidda

milawidda:: wili, ngaaddi wila; wilajga milawidda(:, yoowoooloo gardinhooydidi gilbawinbidiyi, yinggingaddi, ngirmadajyoodoonnga; maroowa; nyagbiddini niyaji, thooddiyibiddaddi, nowoongarni girililyangga thooddijbiddaddi yabiddi wardbiddah, wayandi jardbidi, garanyi wamba ligawidda yanthhooddgban (15)

garanyi dagooddwiddaddi yowoooloooya, niyaji nga; gijaliyga garanyi dagooddwaddiwiwiddadi:: wila thirgibidi ligowiddaniwiddangi::; gardiwindi yowoooloo gardbiddiniyi waddinbiddani (20)

waddinbiddi:: wayandiga ngabbinayi waddinbiddi:: nangbiddani garna; gamanaya yoodbinnibidiyi milawindbidda, marlami, wayandiga ngabbinayi yowoooloo mangaddi; gilbawindid ngaaddi niyajiya, wilajga; gamanaya, marlami (25)

wayandiga ngabgoonayi yah, migawinmi garmidwangooodoo wayandiga ngabbinayi niyinhingi; marlami galoowinbidiyi, wayandigarni ngabnga bidi niyajiyoodoo; yaanya, yowoooloo, thardgiyawiddi:: yoodbinnibi doowooya babaabiddi niyaji yilba; mangaddi barnbarngoo ngambiddi, yilba; yoodbinnibidiyi (30)

Text 2: Another inquest goornboo yowoooloo, goornboo yowarni, ngila, ngoorndoongoomi, loowijaya, ngila goolgaddarya (1)

goornboo yowarni nyagbiddini; yowarni; gardinhooydingga nyagbiddiniyi, boowoodeedoonhingingga yowoooloo; gimangarnangga8 warangji::, ngarloddja goornboo niyaji waddinbani milawidda::, wamba goonybidda::; boolthoogbindi, joowoooloo

8 The term gimangarna (literally 'bush dweller') is used to refer to Aborigines who have had (or are believed to have had) little or no contact with whites, and who lead essentially traditional lives. It seems that this term does have some negative connotations, and suggests that the people referred to are unsophisticated.
DEATH PRACTICES IN NORTH WEST AUSTRALIA

Text 1: An inquest

olden days people, olden days people, spear; meat, two; maybe two, yes two might spear, they speared him, a man, in the middle of the day (1)

he was lying there, and as they looked he got up he got up and went, they; they got up and went sneakingly, the murderers they went, and returned; for good they waited; they listened for news (5)

news of death arrived, that man had died word, word of his death came to them later; they put him; (coughs), some; er; they put him up on a burial platform they put up stones all around named stones

they stood (stones) up around (10) while the body burst, they waited, and when it had decomposed, then, the tree, they looked at it

they looked OK, at the stones; they looked around, and discovered the two men, whose names were on rocks, those two; murderers; who speared him this one, they took him down, the dead body then they took down from the tree they took it, they lit a fire, in a cooking trench they waited until it had decomposed (15)

they put hot stones inside the body of the man, in that um; in the dead man they put a few stones inside his body OK

they covered him up

they listened for news; the two men fell they fell sick (20)

they were sick the fire having burnt them

they got sick and died

plat; they put the two of them on a tree platform they looked at them, but nothing, the fire had burnt them no men, they weren't able to find anyone marked on the rocks there, around; the burial platform, no one (25)

'a fire burnt them,' they said

'a fire burnt the two of them'

then; they found nothing relating to the two, a fire had burnt them these two; the others, the men, they put these other them up inside a cave that's for good, they can't go back again, for good; they put them away (30)

Text 2: Another inquest

people, one woman, in the east, at what-cha-ma-call-it, at Louisa, east at Goolgaddra (1)

one woman they speared; one; two men speared her, men from the north, bush blacks she was sitting there, and after three days this woman fell ill

they watched, and they waited, until it burst, her stomach Wambanyali goonybidda yanhthoooddgbani (5) giriliya wardbiddi, moongaya milawidda::; yingingaddi gilbawinbidiyi, yoowooloo garsiwiiddi, yoowooloo booddoongoonhingi, gimangarna niyaji wagardi; niyaji; goomboo doowwidda, laandi girilinhiingi thooddijbiddaddi wardbidda:: goodggo; widdijbinmi way; wayandi jardbidi garanyi yoodbidi (10) garanyi yoodbinyi:: wi, ba; niyajya goombooya, ngaandiya babaabiddi middaya, yoodbinihi garanyi, ngal; joondangaddingga doornbinmi, bagiyi
doornbinmi:: wi, bagiyi yilba niyinhiingi ligoowiddani::; boowoooddo gardoobiddani garnbikiwiiddi yoowooloo (15) boowoooddo waddinbiddiyi:: nangbiddaniyi briyandiya, migawinmi yaabja, briyandiya yoodbinnidiyi yal; booddoongoonhingingga yoowooloo migawinmi, giyangaddingga briyandiya yoodbinnidiyi, wila bagoowoooddii mangaddi; ngabaddi barndaj; aa; mangaddi ngabaddi:, ngoorndoongoonnooyoo, barnajbarnajdoogoo, marlimi (20) wila bagiwiiddaddi, wamba bagiwiiddi

Text 3: A murder at Noonkanbah yoowarningga, yoowooloo::; jangala, jangalangga garli, wajbaddi, maningga (1) thiddi, wajbaddi, limimi; aa: limimiya, man.gaya yalawa, garlingaddingga niyajya, warawara;9 gardbini
garli yingi baljaddango, garli, yingi, baljaddango nag;ganyali gardbini, garlingaddingga yoowooloo nijya nangbani (5) niyaji yoowooloo garbbiwiidda, moooddoongaddingga, garndiwaangooddoongga garbbiwiidda yoowooloongga:: wi, yood; yoodbidi nijy gijali, moongayayoo gijali::; yoowooolooi::, jambiyindinhiingi, jambiyindi bagi, moongaya, wardbidda, garmanaya, thardbiddaddi (10) ngaaddi, janddidi, wilaiga, thardgoowa;widdani ngaaddi; nijy, yingingaddi yoowooloo; garnbikiwiddingga, milawiddadi, maroowangaddi yoowooloo:: garnbikiwiiddi, yalawanyali
yalawa; nijayiyanyali mayaro; waranggilawooddooyoo yoowooloo warangbiddi warangbiddi nijayiyi, milawiddaniddi, milawiddadi, garnbikiwiiddingga jimbiomaddingga, yagbiddini, yiganyingga(15) yiganyingga; nyagbiddinyyi, jimbiomaddingga gadbiddini
wardbiddi:: balbiddainmi; riwiyidda garndiwiiddi:: garnbikiwiiddi yoowarni, riwi bagiwiiddi yoowarni; wik, bagiwiiddi (20)

---

9 Warawarda does not appear in the field transcript, nor is it a word I am familiar with. It was detected during the process of rechecking the transcripts in preparing them for publication.
DEATH PRACTICES IN NORTH WEST AUSTRALIA

they waited until her body had decomposed (5) they went to the tree, one morning they looked; and found the named stones, of two men, men from the north, bush blacks this tree(?); this; they got the woman, and took her down from the tree they took her and a hole; they dug fir; they lit a fire, and put in hot stones (10) they put hot stones into her body OK, um; into the woman, inside her body in her head, they put hot stones, sing; singing songs they covered her up, lying there they covered her up OK, and she lay there for good then they listened for news; the two men fell in the north (15) in the north the two of them fell sick and died
'in revenge,' the others said, 'they killed them in retribution' er; the northerners said (that), the Kija men
'they were put down in retribution, and they can remain like that' no; they won't sneak up again; um; not again, what's it called?, they don't attempt to sneak up on anyone, no (20)
they leave it at that, they let the two of them remain (unavenged)

Text 3: A murder at Noonkanbah
one, man, a jangala man, jangala man a boomerang, he threw it, one night (1) in a fight, he threw it, cheek; um in the cheek, close to the ear, with a boomerang there, he hit him
the boomerang was a baljaddangoo boomerang, the boomerang, was named, baljaddanggoo he killed him dead, with the boomerang this man died (5)
they belted this man (the murderer), with sticks, everyone the men belted him OK put; they put the dead body down, until the next morning the dead one, a man, was of the jambiyindi subsection, jambiyindi he remained there, next morning, they took him, on tree burial platform, they put him (10) rocks, divining rocks, all around, they were standing rocks; these, had names on them men; two, they saw him, two murderers, close by from a nearby homestead, where they lived they sat there, watching him, they watched him, the two, and with a quartz-tipped spear, they speared him, sneakily (15) sneakingly, they speared him, with a quartz tipped spear they left him
they went and returned; to their camp five, days they camped
one; week, they waited (20) wikja, aa mandiya, mandiya; girili; milawidda wardbiddi:: milawidda girili wilajga milawidda:: wili gilbawinbidyi gamdiwiddi yoowooloo yingangaddi ngaaddi wila (25)
laandinhi ngajali wajjibaddi, (coughs) jabiddi wajjibaddi, wardbidda; langgagoorliya; yoodbidi bagiyi langgagoorliya biddibbiddini; langgagoorloo, yoodbidi bangiwiiddi nga; aa ngarloodoo yoowooloo bimbiddaddi, yiganyingga (30) yiganyi; ngarloodoo yoowooloo bimbiddaddi, yaanyaya wik wayandiya yoodbidi, garanjiya:: wayandiya yoodbidi niyaji yoowooloo, gijali marnawamarnawangga yoodbiddi
bagiyi:: h, yoowooloo ngirmda gamdiwiddi gardbiddaniyi, marooyayoodoo waddinbiddi:: h, ojbidl.yiddaa balawinbidyi, derbyyiddaa (35) derbyyaa; nangbiddani, ojbidl.ya ya; niyajiya::; derbyya; thirginbiddi, bandaya, wajbalingga goowajgoooda biniril niyajiya; thirginbiddi, yilba

Text 4: Another murder at Noonkanbah thiddinyali gardbiwiddani ya; ngambiddinyali yaab; ngambiddinyali, thiddi gardbiwiddani, yaabjangga, aa; maninga, maningganyali (1) yoowooloo:: h, yingi booroongbooroong niyingga gardbini, yaanya; jambiyindinyali ngajangoowa, marnawa gijali bagiri, ngamooinhingi, and ngajangoowa,12 wangganhami gardbini broongbroon; ngga, yoowooloo yingi booroongbooroongngga:: gardbini, wangganhami
yilbanyali gardbini, gijaliyiddaa (5) blanketingaddingga doombinmi; maningga, gijali; moongaya; giriilyayoo, wardbidda thardbiddaddi wilajga ngaadddi yoodbidi, yingangaddinialyi, garnaanaya yoodbidi:: wila
niyaji;nhingi, balbiddawinmi (10)

10 The presence of the ergative postposition on yiganyi 'uncertain' is unusual, since the clause is intransitive (there are however a number of like examples in the corpus of texts, so I do not label the clause as ungrammatical). Note that in the next clause (sentence 31), the ergative does not appear, even though the verb is identical.
11 Ngambiddinyali ('again'-REP) 'again' here alludes to the previous text (text 3), which was uttered immediately prior to text 4.
12 Note that both the term for the younger brother and the term for the older brother are marked by the genitive (glossed 'his'). This is in keeping with a general principle of Gooniyandi grammar whereby both objects in a frame of comparative reference are taken as the standard of reference - thus, for example, we usually have the equivalent of 'the other was walking, and the other was standing', rather than 'one was walking, the other was standing' (see McGregor 1984:367).
DEATH PRACTICES IN NORTH WEST AUSTRALIA

next week, um on the Monday, on Monday; the tree; they had a look at it they went and looked at the tree they looked all around OK
they found the two men with their names on the rocks OK (25)
they threw it (the body) down from above (coughs) they threw him down, and took him; and in a hollow log; they put him he lay in the hollow log they blocked it off; the hollow log, having put him inside they returned, the; um the three men returned, sneakingly (30) sneakingly; the three men went back, the next week they put him in a fire, they put that man in a long cooking trench, the dead man, his brothers
they put him
he lay there, the two men fell sick, the two murderers they fell sick, and were sent to hospital, to Derby hospital (35) in Derby; they died, at the hospital yes; right there; in Derby; they buried them, in the ground, in what white people call a funeral
there; they buried the two of them, for good

Text 4: Another murder at Noonkanbah they fought together again; again some; again, they fought together, some people, um; one night, again one night (1) a man, called Booroongbooroong he killed him, another; jambiindyi man the younger brother, whose older brother was dead, some time before, and the younger brother, he was hit in the skull by Booroongbooroong, the man called Booroongbooroong hit him, in the skull he hit him, to death (5) they covered him with a blanket; that night, the dead man; in the morning; to a tree, they took him they put it up
they put rocks around, named rocks, under the burial platform they put them around and finished (10) Text 5: An unavenged death

thiddi gardboowiddami, ngilayani (1) gardboowiddami thiddi, soonookngga, gardbini, wanggalhmani mangaddi wanggalhmani dagi, jabi gardbini, maningga jabi gardbini nagganyali, jagaddanhingi yoowooloo, gardbini yaabjangga; yawanbiddami, gardboowiddami (5)
then, they went back after one; month, they were looking, at the tree, at the platform at the tree platform; they were looking, they went and were looking at it they looked around; but nothing, they found nothing, no rock; any murderer, they were finding nothing, they found nothing he had hit him in the right place (15) 'OK he hit him with a hitting stick; there was no murderer,' all the men said that man didn't know about hitting sticks, the dead man, he didn't know in the skull, he didn't mean to hit him in the skull, chee; there chee; um, he hit him a little up from the ear he hit him for good; to death um, they took him, and threw him down (20) they took him and put him in a hollow log they said 'later, we'll put him in the fire later' they went back, to their camps, in another week; went back; they returned they put him in the fire, and left him sitting there that man fell sick there, the murderer (25) his name was Booroongbooroong, a jagadda man; a jagadda man, there; he fell sick he lay there sick and died, right there; Moo; right at Noonkanbah he died there in the homestead they put him next; on a tree platform on a tree platform; up, they took him to a tree platform, this murderer they put him up, in the tree (30) they left him lying there, having put rocks around they put rocks around, named rocks they left him, the men returned, they went back to their camps another, two; um on the third week; they looked nothing, they found nothing, they didn't find a murderer (35) no, the body didn't decompose and mark the stones, nothing he threw him, they threw him down 'let's try him in the fire,' they said, his brothers, all the jagadda men his brothers were all; jagadda men they tried him in the fire, ..., but nothing that was all, he was the murderer (40) 'he himself is a murderer, he killed him, he himself, that other dead man,' they said OK they left him for good they returned, um; listen; they listened for word but nothing no one got ill or anything 'he himself killed someone,' they said (45) they left it at that, they stopped there for good, having heard nothing no one fell sick, the fire didn't burn anyone, no one nor two people, nothing he himself, was a murderer, and had fallen sick

Text 5: An unavenged death they fought together, in the east (1) during the big fight, Snook, hit someone, in the head not right on the skull, but on the back of the neck he hit him, one night he hit him dead on the back of the neck, a jagadda man, he killed him the others; belted one another, fighting together (5)
Text 6: Death taboos
marniwa, aa: (1)
W.McG. um
yiganyi, garingoowa, nangbani, ngoombarnawa thithi bajgiyi niyinhingi gooddmoo; goomooloo riwi gadbini ward; ward;ji, yaanyaya riwi bagiri, bagiyi (5) yaanyaya riwi bagi, niyinhingi wardji yaanyaya mayarooa; yilba waranggiri mangaddi barmbargiri ngambiddi niyajiyiddaa, riwi goomooloo gadbini, garingoowa; nanggilawaninhi

---

13 Note the contrast between this clause and the immediately previous one (in sentence 26); the two are near minimal pairs. In (26) garanyi 'hot stone' is non-participant Actor - that is, an Instrument - in a clause referring to putting stones in the dead body. In (27), it is a goal of the same process. One might attempt to encapsulate the difference in meaning with the following English translations: 'They filled up (in) the dead man with hot stones' vs. 'They put hot stones into the dead man's stomach and head'.

98
DEATH PRACTICES IN NORTH WEST AUSTRALIA

they fought together and finished, they belted him, the one who had killed the man with a hitting stick they belted him and finished the man; now; the dead man, in a blanket, they rolled him up, they put him down, until the morning in the morning, in a tree; they put him, on a burial platform rocks; around; divining stones, divining stones, they put around underneath him, with names (10) they left him, and went back to their camps they remained there, for two months they were looking looked; at the tree they looked, but found nothing they looked at the divining stones with names but found no indications (15) some of them said, 'no, he killed him with a hitting stick'
'no this; dry; stone; it is, it stands'
'dry; the rocks; are standing around'
'OK; hitting stick; he killed him dead with a hitting stick' they looked again but nothing (20)
they put him down
'in the fire; let's try him, let's try him in the fire, hey?'
they took him, they took him south, towards the side of a hill, on the north side; of the river, on the side of a hill there, they lit a fire in a hole it burn away OK (25)
they put hot stones in him, in the dead man's body they put hot stones in his stomach, in his head, they put hot stones in him
they covered him up
they covered him up OK, and left him they returned, and they went back to their camps (30) they listened for news but nothing, as a murderer
'right, he killed him with a hitting stick,' they said another mon ... another month and another month, they waited to no avail no one fell sick; no person; as murderer
'that's it because he killed the other man with a hitting stick' they said (35)

Text 6: Death taboos
his older sister, um (1)
W.McG. um
maybe, his wife, died, the husband got up and went from there bereave; he left the place of bereavement went; he went, and camps at another place, he camped (5) he camped at another place, then he went to another homestead, he remains for good he doesn't go back there, he left the place of bereavement, where his wife; died he stops for good yilba waranggiri doonggooloo wardgiri, maa mangaddi ngabga, jaalinyi: ngarloodiya migaya nganggoodoo maa, nyoongoodda (10) ngabga maarna, maarni ngabga doonggoolongaddi ngamoo wardjayi W.McG. ah
ngirndaji thangarndi, aa:, mangaddi yingi goowajggo, niyaji gigali, marlami goon.gaa, ngoombarnawangga goon.gaa (15) yaabjangga mangaddi yingi goowajgooodda, ngoombarnawangga, ngoombarnawangga mangaddi goowajga, marlami

Text 7: Murder at Leopold Downs
boolga, wadinbani (1) waddinji, youwariniya wik, gandiwiddi wik, youwoo, gandiwidiya wik, waddinji ngidi; balbiddayinmi, ngilmangi wilangi waddinbani, moolbarni; warangjiiddy niyajiya moolba waddinji wilangi, jalangangooddoongga yoowooloo, milawinda, doowwiddanhi jimbla yoowarni (5)

niyinhingi wamba, wambanyali bagiyi, waddinji ligayidda, a:: nangbani boooddoonggoo; wardjidda, garnana, nagrag;jinminhi laandi, thadjiddadi, garnanaya nganyiyoooloo, thadladi, barayiddi, nganyi laandi barlondi (10) laandi, barlondi, jidiblimi, laandi garnanaya; yoodli bidingga, ngaaddi wilajja, nganyi thoodngani, thoodjiddanidi ngarloodooyoyoooloo, ngarloodooyhoodjiddanidi, bandayidda, girliningi ngaaddi; wilajja, yooodgoowawidi, yingingaddi ngaaddi, yoowooloongaddi yingi wilajja thadbiddanhi:: wila ngirnda youwoooloo, yingingaddiyali thadbiddanhi biyaddwanggoo (15) wamba bag; niyinhingi barmgiyiddi bagiyiddi::, ngarlooodja, wik; ngarlooodjdja, barmgiyiddi milayidda girili, girili milayidda:: wili yoowarni; yoowarni; doownga, youwarini thawooddwin, ngirndaji; biyaddwanggoo, ngilmanginchingi youwoooloo milayidda wila (20)
thaanoonggoo baryinmi, jidibbinmi; laandi, bidi bawardbinmi thaanoonggoo babiddi; wajbiddaddi doowwidda, gooddoombaya mirdbinmi boooddoonggoo wardbidda::, migawinmingiddangi, gidi balbiddawingginmi, ngirnda wardgidda, doowooyayoo, migawinni nga; ngajangoowangajangoowangga wardbiddaddi, wardbiddaddi boooddoonggoo (25) boooddooy, ngaaddiya, doowooy dooobidi babaabiddi bidbiddibinhti ngaaddi balbiddawinni
he goes under a meat taboo, he doesn't eat meat, for three months then they give him meat, and rub him (10) he eats meat now, meat he eats now he had been under a taboo before W.McG. ah (tape recorder turned off briefly) this word, um, he can't say the name, of the dead person, no he must remain silent, the husband must remain silent (15) no one can say the name, none of the husbands (classificatory), the husbands can't say it, no

Text 7: Murder at Leopold Downs
an old man, fell sick (1) he was sick, one week, two weeks, yes, two weeks, he was sick we; we were returning, west he was sick behind, together; we were sitting together as a big group at that place he was sick behind, the doctors, they looked at him, and removed a piece of quartz from him (5)
then later, for some time he lay, sick we waited, and he died north; we took him, a burial platform, we made for him up, we put him, on the burial platform me too, I put him up; we climbed, I climbed up (10) up, I climbed, and lifted him, up; on the platform, I put him they, (put) rocks around, I got down, we three men got down, three jumped down, to the ground, from the tree rocks; around, they put them, named rocks, with names of people they stood rocks around OK this man, was named by the stones a man from Biyadd (15) later lie; then we returned we waited, three, weeks; on the third week we went back we looked at the tree, we looked at the tree OK one; one; it got it, it wet one (stone), this; man from Biyadd, the easterner we looked OK (20)
we climbed up, they lifted him up; up, they climbed up down; they threw him
they got him, and wrapped him up in paperbark they took him north, and told us, 'go back, we'll take this to a cave,' they said urn; his younger brothers took him, they took him north (25) north, in a hill, they put him inside a cave they blocked it with stones they returned
Commentary and conclusions

Texts 1 to 5 and text 7 are narratives dealing with inquests and subsequent acts of retribution, the first five texts being biographical, the last being autobiographical. A number of interesting observations emerge from these six texts.

(1) Inquests were performed by putting the body of a dead person on a tree platform, below which was placed a circle of stones, each of which represented someone who may have been responsible for the murder. The body was left for a few months, until it had decomposed. The stones would be examined, and those marked by the exudates of the corpse would indicate the murderer. Text 2 shows that women as well as men were accorded this type of inquest. (Another text explains that inquests were not (normally) performed for young children.)

(2) A recurrent theme is that if death took place at night, the dead body was left wrapped in a blanket until the next morning (see line 10 of text 3, line 6 of text 4, and lines 8 and 9 of text 5), when it was placed on the platform.

(3) It is notable that even if someone is witnessed killing another person, an inquest is still held (see texts 3 and 4). And as text 3 illustrates, the inquest may identify someone other than the person who actually struck the blow as the one really responsible.

(4) Once the murderer had been determined, action was taken to redress the death. In texts 1 to 5, sorcery was employed to kill the murderer. This was accomplished by putting hot stones in the corpse; the effect of this was that the person responsible for the death would fall sick, and die. More direct methods were, of course, also employed. One text describes how a group of relatives of a dead woman travelled over an enormous area, tracking and eventually killing the murderer. These 'avengers' (or "soldiers", as Jack Bohemia would say) painted themselves in white ochre before going on their expedition; thus their Gooniyandi name is galardingama, literally 'white ochre dweller'. On the other hand, in text 7, a white agency, the police, was used: the police were informed, and their trackers succeeded in capturing the murderer.

(5) Each of texts 1, 2, 4 and 5 show that an inquest is not always successful. Text 4 and 5 show that, if the inquest fails, the body may still be tried in the fire, as a second inquest. Here, the hot stones are placed in the body, and the bereaved just await for news of someone's death, this person is then held to have been responsible.

(6) The second inquest may or may not be successful. In each of the texts 1, 2, 4 and 5 there is at least one death for which no murderer is found. In each instance, some reason is advanced for this failure. In texts 1, 2, and 4, it is because the dead person was in turn responsible for killing someone else; in text 5 it seems to be because the death was accidental (note that the same explanation is given for the failure of the first inquest in text 4).

(7) The corpse is finally disposed of by placing it in a cave, or in a hollow log, the entrance of which is blocked up. According to text 7, the body is wrapped in paperbark first (see plate 2); this text also indicates that it was the responsibility of the brothers of the deceased to carry the body from the burial platform to the final resting place.

(8) The texts mention another way in which a person may be ensorcelled dead: by magical spearing with a quartz-tipped spear. The ensorcelled person falls sick and finally dies. The actual process is not described in detail in any of the texts, but is alluded to in text

---

14 See, for example, the photographs in Idriess 1949:98, and 1937:198.
15 Interestingly, this process is what Bohemia understood me to be referring to when I questioned him about pointing the bone.
Plate 2: 'Remains of a dead blackfellow'. Courtesy of The West Australian. Published in Western Mail, 22/2/1940.
Text 6 is expository rather than narrative; it presents a general rather than a particularistic account of the taboos that were placed on relatives of the deceased. Three taboos are mentioned: (a) a proscription on remaining in, and later visiting the place of death of the relative (compare the proscription on returning to the place of burial, mentioned in text 1); (b) enforcement of a taboo on eating meat for some months after the death;\(^\text{16}\) and (c) proscription on uttering the name of the dead person. Reference to all of these can readily be found in the anthropological and linguistic literature.

I have already commented briefly on the anthropological importance of texts such as those included here. I will conclude by mentioning what in my opinion are the most important implications to anthropology.

Firstly, traditional rites and taboos are not practised by the Gooniyandi, and probably have not been for some time.\(^\text{17}\) Inquests are no longer held, and payback killings no longer take place; corpses go immediately into the control of white institutions. (There is some evidence, however, that inquests - albeit not the full rites, with the platform - are still held by desert peoples residing in Fitzroy Crossing.) Even the taboos are rarely observed either rigorously or strongly. Thus the only way of obtaining information relating to the traditional practices is by talking to individuals alive today, who remember the past, or who have heard about it from others. What Jack Bohemia's texts show very clearly is the importance of biographical texts; as we have seen, such texts can reveal where general principles fail. I did on a number of occasions question Jack Bohemia and other Gooniyandi men about death rituals, asking what was done in this or that circumstance; the results were almost invariably generalisations of the type which predominate in text 6. They did not suggest that the inquests sometimes failed, or why.

Jack Bohemia's silence on certain matters is also, I believe, significant. He does not for instance distinguish in his texts between those rituals performed by Gooniyandi, and those performed by others - although we can in places make good guesses: for example, the Noonkanbah murders (texts 3 and 4) presumably involved Walmajarri people; the Louisa murder (text 2) and Snook's murder (text 5) presumably involved Gooniyandi people (Snook was a Gooniyandi man); and the Leopold murder presumably involved mainly Bunuba people. This could be a reflection of the destruction to traditional life which followed white colonisation; or there may be some other explanation. Furthermore, he takes white interference for granted; for instance, no attempt is made to justify the failure to hold an inquest for the two men who died in Derby (text 3), or to try to obtain the corpse.

\(^{16}\) It is likely that there was a rite surrounding the lifting of the meat taboo - see Hudson et al 1978:45, which describes such a rite in Walmajarri. Bohemia's mention of rubbing (see line 10) is presumably a reference to a similar rite in Gooniyandi. It is not clear in Bohemia's text what is rubbed on the bereaved person; Siddon (Hudson et al 1978:45) says that fat was rubbed over the mouth and face of the bereaved, and it may have been the same in Gooniyandi tradition.

\(^{17}\) Internal evidence suggests that the events described in the texts took place sometime this century. For instance, Snook (see text 5) was a contemporary of Jack Bohemia; mention of sending sick Aborigines from Noonkanbah to Derby hospital suggests some fairly recent date, and later in text 7 there is mention of police tracker Joe, who was a famous tracker in the 1920s and 1930s (see for instance Idriess 1935:76). My hypothesis is that all of the events described took place during the course of Bohemia's lifetime, which is why he is able to provide such detail.
Thirdly, another interesting thing brought out in these texts (usually given short shrift by anthropologists) is the traditional names of various items and actions relating to the particular field of social action or experience, in this case death. (Not all of these are specific to this aspect of experience.) Such terms give us some notion of the way in which Gooniyandi culture divides up the 'semantic space' of death and death ritual, etc. Not surprisingly, terms of this type are difficult, if not impossible to elicit formally, in response to English prompts, and in any event, their significance can only be appreciated through examination of textual occurrences. Below I list these terms, in alphabetical order, together with a short explanation:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Explanation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>biniril</td>
<td>'funeral'; this term is clearly a borrowing from English, and is used in reference to the burial rites of the dominant culture in Australia.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>boolthoog-briyandi</td>
<td>'in revenge, in turn'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>briyandiya</td>
<td>'in revenge'; the difference between briyandi and briyandiya (which presumably involves the LOC postposition) is unclear at present. It seems, however, that briyandi is more usually used as a manner adverbial, relating one event to a previous one (usually mentioned in the immediately preceding text), whereas briyandiya does not normally relate two events in contiguous clauses (see line 19 of text 2).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>doonggooloo</td>
<td>'taboo'; this term appears to be restricted to the meat taboo enforced on the death of a close relative.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>garanyi</td>
<td>'cooking trench, hot stones'; interestingly, this term is also used in reference to guns, rifles, and bullets.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>garnana</td>
<td>'tree platform on which a dead body is placed'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gjali</td>
<td>'dead body, dead person, dead'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>goomooloo</td>
<td>'bereaved'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>goon.ga</td>
<td>'refrain from speaking, speak circumspectly'. This term is used in reference to various situations in which speech should be either avoided, or monitored carefully. The paradigm circumstances for this behaviour are (a) speaking to, about, or in the presence of one's mother-in-law; (b) speaking about the recently dead. Gooniyandi speakers most frequently gloss it 'don't speak'.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>goowaa</td>
<td>'news of a death'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>jarndiddi</td>
<td>'divining stones'; stones placed under a burial platform in an inquest to find the person responsible for a death' (see also yarndili).</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

19 Jack Bohemia referred to this structure as a galbari in his variety of English. This clearly shows the influence of Christianity: it is Bohemia's pronunciation of Calvary, the place at which Christ was crucified.
20 The stones used to divine the person responsible for a death in an inquest are variously called yingingaddi ngaaddi 'named stones', yingingaddi 'with names, named', just plain ngaaddi 'stones', jarndiddi, and yarndili. The last two terms are of interest because they show the well attested correspondences j of Walmajarri (and other Pama-Nyungan languages to the south and south east) with y of Gooniyandi, and dd (=rr) of Walmajarri with l of Gooniyandi (see McGregor forthcoming). It is also noteworthy that the first term, and not the second, occurs in text 3, which concerns a death at Noonkanbah, which jimbila  'quartz, a quartz spear-tip inserted in a body by sorcery' ligoo  'listen for news of the death of someone who has been ensorcelled' maroowa  'killer, murderer'. Usually given the English gloss 'murderer' by Gooniyandi speakers; however, this term contains none of the implications of intentionality of 'murderer' in English.21 nawoornga  'dead body, dead person' yanhthooddg-  'decompose (of a dead body)' yarnditi  'divining stones'; stones placed under a burial platform in an inquest to find the person responsible for a death'

Many more terms could in principle be added to this list, but these are the main ones mentioned in the texts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

_____. Over the range. Sydney, 1937.
_____. One wet season. Sydney, 1949.

_____. The status of the feature [rhotic] in some languages of the north west of Australia. Forthcoming in Aboriginal Linguistics.

Muecke, Stephen, Alan Rumsey and Bango Wirrunmarra. 'Pigeon the outlaw: history as texts', Aboriginal History 9, 1985:81-100.
Street, David and Topsy Chestnut. 'We spell it 'Gooniyandi': notes on the new Gunian orthography', Australian Aboriginal Studies 2, 1983:78.
Western Mail, Perth, 22 February 1940.

has been a Walmajarri stronghold for a number of years, while the second term, but not the first, occurs in text 5, which apparently refers to a death at Louisa Downs. This may well be a reflection of the connection between language and place which has been noted by a number of Australianist linguists (e.g. Nash 1985).

21 See Maley 1985.