

Contributors

Stephanie Anderson is a Visiting Fellow in History in the School of Humanities at the Australian National University.

Frank Bongiorno was a postdoctoral fellow in History at the Australian National University when he wrote his article. He now teaches history at the University of New England in Armidale.

Brian Egloff teaches in the Cultural and Heritage Management unit of the Division of Building and Design at the University of Canberra.

Robert Foster teaches history at the University of Adelaide. His articles have appeared previously in this journal.

Geoff Gray runs the history program at the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies.

Minoru Hokari was attached to the Centre for Cross-Cultural Research at the Australian National University when he submitted his article. He has since moved to the Division of Pacific and Asian History in the University's Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies.

Murray Johnson teaches history in the Department of History at the St Lucia (Brisbane) campus of the University of Queensland.

Isabel McBryde is a Professor Emerita of Archaeology at the Australian National University, where she is currently a Visiting Fellow in History of the School of Humanities. She is also a Visiting Fellow of the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies.

John Morris lectures in Aboriginal history at the University of Ballarat, Victoria. He developed his article there under a publication grant awarded by the University, which he gratefully acknowledges.

Karl Neuenfeldt and Kathleen Oien are attached to the School of Contemporary Communications of the Central Queensland University at Bundaberg.

Robert Petersen is an honorary research associate in the Faculty of Education at the University of Sydney.

Benjamin Smith has conducted research and worked as an anthropological consultant on land claims in north Queensland since 1996. He is currently completing a Ph.D. as a research student at the London School of Economics based on his research in the Coen region of Cape York Peninsula.

Pam Smith is an archaeologist attached to the Department of Archaeology in the Faculty of Education, Humanities, Law and Theology at Flinders University in Adelaide.

James Weiner carries out his research in the Division of Anthropology in the Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies at the Australian National University.