Acknowledgements

This has been an ambitious project, and we are grateful to all our workshop participants and chapter authors for responding so enthusiastically to our call for 'joining up' scholars and practitioners from across Australia and New Zealand who shared an interest in understanding and improving public leadership. We would like to acknowledge financial support from ANZSOG, the Research School of Social Sciences at ANU and the Parliamentary Studies Centre at the Crawford school of Economics and Government at ANU for making the workshop possible. We are also grateful to Aaron Martin, Kathryn Kelly and Karen Tindall for their useful notes on the workshop discussions. Karen Tindall moreover played an invaluable role in organising the workshop. We intend to stage thematically focused workshops on public leadership annually, and we can only hope that future ones will be as engaging and productive as the first.
